Our team recently completed a unique project that involved adding a detached garage on a property in Strasburg Borough's historic district. Previously, the home was restored by a group of investors looking to preserve some of Strasburg Borough's older homes. This group had an agreement for the home with one contingency: add a two-car detached garage.

The potential buyers contacted us to guide them through the design/build process. We also worked with the Strasburg Borough Historic Architectural Review Board (HARB) on a design that would complement the historic architecture of the restored home.

Once approval from the Borough and HARB was obtained for the design, the buyers were ready to move forward with the purchase of the home and the construction of the garage. Some of the architectural elements that were used on the garage included cedar shakes for the roof, seamless half-round copper gutters and downspouts, James Hardie fiber cement siding, and authentic wooden shutters and hardware. All of these materials were used in an effort to blend seamlessly with the existing home and maintain historical integrity.

Projects that Add to Resale Value

This topic, “Projects that Add to Resale Value,” is actually a highly debated topic within the construction community. For starters, projects don’t always yield exact outcomes. Results can vary on a number of factors: the cost of the improvement, the quality of materials and the neighborhood where the home is located, just to name a few.

However, a few improvements consistently top the annual list of projects that will add to the resale value of your home.

KITCHEN AND/OR MASTER SUITE RENOVATIONS

A major kitchen renovation or a master suite addition are two projects that can catch the eye of potential home buyers. While the upfront cost for this type of project is more expensive, it can actually sell a home. Furthermore, the amount of money for a larger project that can be recouped in a resale grows with time. And of course, the more time between a kitchen renovation or master suite project and the sale of the home allows you time to enjoy your newly renovated space.

A WELL-CARED-FOR HOME

Raised perceived value is also found in projects that show a potential home buyer that you have cared for the home over the years. Projects like roof replacement, a nicely landscaped yard or even a fresh coat of paint with a new trending color shows that you value your home.

CURB APPEAL PROJECTS

Other high-ranking home improvements are ones that improve a home’s curb appeal. Projects such as adding stone veneer to a simple facade or siding replacement can lure potential buyers. Accenting the entryway to the home with a front porch addition or improvements add value as well.

One of the highest ranking home improvements that offers the best return for the dollars spent is replacing the entry door and lockset. If your existing door and lockset are in good shape, giving your front entry a fresh coat of paint can make a huge impact. Your front door is one of the first things a potential buyer sees as they pull up to the curb.

WHAT ARE THE ADVANTAGES OF DOING THIS NOW?

One of the biggest advantages to making improvements now rather than waiting until you are ready to sell is that you are maintaining your home. It is always less expensive to keep up with minor repairs than waiting until a major repair is necessary.

Another advantage is it allows you the opportunity to enjoy the new or renovated areas. So many homeowners spend time and money just a few months before they are ready to sell their home and comment that they wished their house looked this nice when they were living in it.

Your Home's Service Requests

At Metzler Home Builders, we stand by our work by providing a warranty for your home. Our service department is available to take care of any warranty needs when your project is complete. Once your warranty has expired, we offer regular maintenance and service for your home.

Although we have always provided service to our customers, we are also always looking for ways to improve our process of doing things. We feel we've not always been clear on the best way to initiate a service call, or whom in particular you should contact. In an effort to streamline our service requests and improve response time, we are asking that our customers send their requests to MHBservice@MetzlerHomeBuilders.com. With this new system, someone will contact you to schedule a time to come and look at the issues you are having.
